

Weekly Investment Commentary

Progress in Europe Lifts Sentiment

December 12, 2011

A Volatile, but Positive, Week for the Markets

Markets traded in a volatile fashion last week, with investors quickly reacting to news and rumors surrounding responses to the ongoing European debt crisis. Thanks to a rally on Friday, markets ended the week in positive territory, with the Dow Jones Industrial Average climbing 1.4% to 12,184, the S&P 500 Index climbing 0.9% to 1,255 and the Nasdaq Composite advancing 0.8% to 2,646.

Euro Summit Deal Represents Tangible Progress

Market action last week centered on the European summit that took place on Thursday and Friday. While no one is suggesting that the debt crisis will go away any time soon, the framework agreement that was reached has at least reduced some of the anxiety and appears to have eased the gridlock in European financial markets.

Although there are many details that still need to be worked out, it does appear that most parties in Europe are in agreement about the need to establish a more stable fiscal union that has tighter controls over the region's debts and deficits. While these moves will do little to ease the near-term debt issues affecting many European countries, they are important in that they represent the start of the process of assuring investors and central bankers (particularly the European Central Bank) that politicians are serious about fiscal discipline and that they can no longer delay action. In our view, last week's summit may well represent the first tangible positive developments since the crisis began.

For its part, the ECB did cut interest rates by another 25 basis points last week. This is an important step and mirrors the broader global trend of central banks moving from a tightening to an easing bias that has occurred over the course of 2011. The European Central Bank, however, stopped short of indicating that it would be willing to provide further support for the European banking system. The ECB has clearly been unwilling to take up the charge of being a lender of last resort for the region, but it does seem likely that the central bank will become more proactive if it sees real progress being made in terms of greater fiscal stabilization.

Economic and Investing Environment Continues to Show Signs of Improvement

We have been suggesting over the past several weeks that economic growth in the United States appears to be accelerating, and last week's economic data helped confirm this view. Specifically, US jobless claims fell sharply and we are optimistic that payroll growth should surprise to the upside over the coming months. Additionally, consumer spending remains solid and the corporate sector has been seeing strong profit growth, a trend we expect will continue.

Bob Doll is Chief Equity Strategist for Fundamental Equities at BlackRock®, a premier provider of global investment management, risk management and advisory services. Mr. Doll is also Lead Portfolio Manager of BlackRock's Large Cap Series Funds. Prior to joining the firm, Mr. Doll was President and Chief Investment Officer of Merrill Lynch Investment Managers.

---

In our view, last week's summit may well represent the first tangible positive developments since the crisis began.

While we are not calling for particularly strong levels of economic growth in the year ahead, we do believe that positive surprises may outweigh negative ones. We are expecting to see income levels rise in 2012 and are also calling for continued improvements in private payrolls creation. A key risk to this outlook remains the uncertainty over the extension of the payroll tax cut into 2012. At present, we believe it is more likely than not that a deal will be put together to extend the cuts, but absent such a deal economic and fiscal headwinds would grow.

For stocks, it is hardly likely to be smooth sailing from here, but conditions have certainly improved since the wild market swings that we saw over the summer. Looking ahead, we can identify some reasons for further optimism, particularly in terms of how resilient the US economy has been. As has been the case for many months now, the Eurozone crisis remains the key wildcard, but we may be beginning to see a clearer endgame.

While we are not calling for particularly strong levels of economic growth in the year ahead, we do believe that positive surprises may outweigh negative ones.

---

For additional information, or to subscribe to weekly updates to this piece, please visit www.blackrock.com.

Sources: BlackRock; Bank Credit Analyst. This material is not intended to be relied upon as a forecast, research or investment advice, and is not a recommendation, offer or solicitation to buy or sell any securities or to adopt any investment strategy. The opinions expressed are as of December 12, 2011, and may change as subsequent conditions vary. The information and opinions contained in this material are derived from proprietary and nonproprietary sources deemed by BlackRock to be reliable, are not necessarily all-inclusive and are not guaranteed as to accuracy. Past performance is no guarantee of future results. There is no guarantee that any forecasts made will come to pass. Reliance upon information in this material is at the sole discretion of the reader. Investment involves risks. International investing involves additional risks, including risks related to foreign currency, limited liquidity, less government regulation and the possibility of substantial volatility due to adverse political, economic or other developments. The two main risks related to fixed income investing are interest rate risk and credit risk. Typically, when interest rates rise, there is a corresponding decline in the market value of bonds. Credit risk refers to the possibility that the issuer of the bond will not be able to make principal and interest payments. Index performance is shown for illustrative purposes only. You cannot invest directly in an index.

FOR MORE INFORMATION: www.blackrock.com

BlackRock is a registered trademark of BlackRock, Inc. All other trademarks are the property of their respective owners.

Prepared by BlackRock Investments, LLC, member FINRA.

©2011 BlackRock, Inc. All Rights Reserved.

Not FDIC Insured • May Lose Value • No Bank Guarantee